

Join Us for a Creative Community Project: Adapting to Droughts and Floods in the Coorong Lower Lakes Murray Mouth

We invite you to be part of an exciting new project, supported by the Coorong, Lower Lakes and Murray Mouth (CLLMM) Research Centre, focused on finding ways to help our community adapt to the growing challenges of droughts and floods.

If you're involved in local businesses, natural resource management, or environmental groups, whether you're a fisherman, tourism or hospitality worker, farmer, or part of a nature or regeneration group – we'd love for you to join us for five creative workshops.

This isn't just another research project. Instead of just gathering your thoughts for a report, we want to collaborate with you to create something unique, like a photography exhibit, film, or book or something else. During the first workshop, we'll decide together what we'll create!

The project is a chance to share your ideas in a new and exciting way. With the help of creative experts, we'll guide the workshops at a local venue (chosen by the group), where you'll work together to create something you're proud of – an artifact that reflects the values and challenges we face, and strategies for ensuring that our community, businesses, and environment can thrive in the future.

The success of these strategies depends on your local knowledge. By participating, you'll help bring these ideas into broader conversations, including with State and Federal government through The Goyder Institute.

For more information, please reach out to Bridget McFarland, the UniSA research officer, at bridget.mcfarland@unisa.edu.au by 17th April 2025.

When we have 15 interested people registered, we can collectively arrange the first of our 5 workshops at an agreed time and location.

Many thanks,

Lia, Doreen, Bridget, Nev, Kerri, John, Nicky and Michael
